Excerpt from Peruvian Markets for American Hardware: Prepared Under the Supervision of the United States Commercial Attache at Lima, Peru All along the coast there are short railways running from the ports back into the valleys, to the large estates. The more important of these short lines are administered by the Peruvian Corporation, a British syndicate that also administers the Central and Southern Railways. The remaining short lines have been built largely by private interests as feeders and outlets for the important estates. Of the three commercial divisions, the central region is by far the most important and, in hardware at least, imports more than two thirds of the entire amount.
