Sue made a great effort to push her way to the front of the crowd. The street preacher was talking, and she did not wish to lose a word. She was a small, badly made girl, with a freckled face and hair inclined to red, but her eyes were wonderfully blue and intelligent. She pushed and pressed forward into the thick of the crowd. She felt a hand on her shoulder, and looking up, saw a very rough man gazing at her. Be that you, Peter Harris said Sue. An why didnt yer bring Connie along Hush! said some people in the crowd. The preacher raised his voice a little higher: Tell His disciples and Peter that He goeth before you into Galilee. Peter Harris, the rough man, trembled slightly. Sue found herself leaning against him. She knew quite well that his breath was coming fast. His disciples and Peter, she said to herself. The street preacher had a magnificent voice. It seemed to roll above the heads of the listening crowd, or to sink to a penetrating whisper which found its echo in their hearts. The deep, wonderful eyes of the man had a power of making people look at him. Sue gazed with all her might and main. Father John be a good un, she said to herself. He be the best man in all the world. After the discourse which was very brief and full of stories, and just the sort which those rough people could not help listening to a hymn was sung, and then the crowd dispersed. This item ships from La Vergne, TN. Paperback.
